I spoke to Deborah. She reports that Ned is supposed to get $125K and that, even though it has not been agreed to by you to date, it is a standard in the industry that in a collaboration work that collaborator gets 30% of income, after the advance is earned out. (She says that is how it has been in 100% of the collaborations she has worked on.)

She says she gets 10% and Flip get 10% of any money coming in and she will not (and expects Flip will not) agree to an obligation to return any amount if for some reason anything has to be returned to the publisher. She explains that she and Flip will have done their job in finding a publisher and arranging for publication and are not responsible for any failures by the Proprietor/Author, even if derived from a failure of the Writer. She says that while she does not see the need for an agreement between you and the agents, once can be prepared if you want.

Do the others get the same share in royalties, as well as the advance payments? Just Flip & Doeborah?

Hi Menachem
Thx. I hope we are toward the end of this chapter.
Re to allocations. Of any due payment

The rest which is
